SHE ASKS $6,000 DAMAGES

Eliza Sears Files Suit Against Vandalia Asking That Railroad be Forced to Pay for Injuries Received by Her on September 18, 1908.

HER BUGGY STRUCK BY TRAIN

Suit for $6,000 damages has been filed by Eliza Sears against the Vandalia Railroad Company. The woman alleges that on September 18, 1908 the buggy in which she and her daughter, Edith, were riding, was struck by a Vandalia train at the railroad crossing on the National Road just west of Reelsville.

Mrs. Sears alleges that the railroad employees gave no warning of the approach of a train and that she was in no way responsible for the accident, as she had used due care to avoid injury. Her injuries, she says in her complaint, have affected her heart and that they have caused her to become very nervous. She asks $6,000 damages.

In another suit, Edith Sears, the daughter, asks $600 damages, alleging that she was injured to that extent in the same accident.

The A B C and X Y Z of ADVERTISING

A SERIES OF TEN TALKS ON ADVERTISING written by Seymour Eaton of Philadelphia No. 8

Most department store advertising may be divided into three classes: bad, very bad, and damned bad.

Bargain advertising is in the first class. It does sell goods; but if well done it could easily make three blades of grass grow where one grows now.

The "worth-$20-now-$12.50" bargain offer has been done to death. The people buy the $12.50 article because $12.50 is as much as they want to pay; because they have seen the goods; because they have intelligence enough to know that they are getting good value for the price; but for every one who buys there are two others shooed off by the roll-up, tumble-up, throw-up-your-money hurrah.

An honest bargain properly announced is always good advertising. If I controlled a newspaper page I should use one-third of it, down the side, for legitimate bargains. I should put the word "Bargains" or "Today's Bargains" at the top and with the descriptions of the articles I should give selling prices only; say nothing in figures about values or cost prices; use that space for describing the goods. I should make the descriptions as brief as possible, leave everything to the imagination of the customer except the selling price; and now and then I should omit that; let the customer come to the store to find out. Then I should make these bargains look like charity by very contrast; by using the remainder of the page to advertise my regular-priced, always-in-stock clothing and dress goods and carpets and furniture and all that sort of thing; and I should make this department so full of life and spirit and enthusiasm for the goods as to make my counters irresistible.

The store that preaches is in the second class. Preaching isn't advertising. It may be entertaining and instructive; it may analyze to a nicety the ethical policy of the store; it may impress the weak-minded with the fact that this store is a great public benefactor, a powerful influence for good in the community, a sort of merchandise university which ought to be endowed by the State. But preaching doesn't sell goods; it doesn't even draw a crowd.

The formal, refrigerator, my-brass-plate-is-sufficient advertising is in the third class. It has all the dignity and drawing power of a corpse. Mark you, I am not criticizing the idea. The idea is fine. To be a chosen people clothed in purple and fine linen; to bask in the sunshine of wealth, or of aristocracy, or of fame; to eat where it eats, to drink what it drinks, to wear what it wears, to buy where it buys, to talk what it talks, to dress your poodle dog with what it dresses its poodle dog; to be somebody exclusive, even one or two removed or second hand; that is greatness; and people pay big money for greatness, even for the varnish or veneer. It is the advertising that is bad. It might easily quadruple the trade and yet keep within the boundaries of the elect. Exclusive people don't think. You don't need to put salt on their tails. They follow a leader like a lot of sheep. Your business as an advertiser is to capture the leader; the bellwether of the set. The rest is easy. The others will pay for the privilege of standing in line.

Emball and bury the brass-plate advertising. Use the space to talk to your customers. Some of them read advertisements. If a poor plebeian should happen to read about your goods and wander into your shop by mistake let him do the worrying.

Society Functions Are Success in Spite of the Inclement Weather.

MISS SELBY ALSO A HOSTESS

In spite of the inclement weather the two parties given last night were well attended and the snow only added zest to the occasions. Miss Jean Selby entertained thirty of her high school friends in honor of her sixteenth birthday. After an elaborate luncheon the evening was very pleasantly passed away with games and musical numbers. The rooms were decorated with Chinese lilies.

The second of the evening's social functions was the Young Women's Christian Association reception held in the parlors of the dormitory. The party was of the "sheet and pillow-case" variety and the one hundred and fifty guests were all robed and masked. After being entertained by a succession of musical numbers, readings and stunts peculiar to the spirit of the evening, a grand march was indulged in, and the guests visited every place in the building from the second floor to the basement. Later on the guests unmasked and enjoyed refreshments of sandwiches and pickles.

WILL URGE SEWER FOR TOWN

A committee of ten, appointed by the Greencastle Retail Merchants' Association, will attend council meeting tonight and urge that body to push the work of getting a sewer for Greencastle. The object of the committee in attending the council meeting is to assure the councilmen that the business men are behind the movement and are anxious that a sewer be built as soon as possible.

NO [REPEAL BILL AS YET

Other Important Bills and Amendments Are Introduced in the Senate But Local Option Law Is Not Attacked.

HOSTETTER PRESENTS RESOLUTION

The State Senate were assembled this morning for the first time under a Democratic chairman. Little business was transacted. The first call for bills was made and a number were presented. It was noticeable that no bill referring to the county local option was brought forward. Several other bills of interest were introduced. One was a primary election law the chief point of which is that the voter not casting a ballot for a primary candidate is barred from voting in the later election. The Uniform Accounting Act was looked after by two bills, and the Cities and Towns Act was amended by striking out certain sections having to do with cities of the fourth class. Amendments were also offered to the railroad rate acts and the Metropolitan Police Act will be repealed if Senator McCullough of Anderson has his way.

The house did nothing today beyond passing the appropriation bill to defray the expenses of the session. A concurrent resolution to celebrate the birth of Lincoln was presented by Representative Hostetter of Putnam County, and was passed. The House committees have not been appointed, and little can be done till this is accomplished. Speaker Honan will probably announce the committees tomorrow.

Things at the Capitol

[By F. C. Tilden.]

Now that Marshall has been inaugurated and the way opened for actual work by the lawmakers, the chief topics of conversation around the state house are the senatorial situation, the possibilities of option repeal, and the radical recommendations for reforms made in the Governor's message. More and more the drift seems to be toward Kern, though those on the inside realize that the break to him may be later than was supposed last week. The Slack and Shively forces have a friendly feeling for each other, though any working combination is denied. It is hinted, too, that some Slack votes will go to Lamb if the contest should be prolonged. Kern is now claiming 28 votes and Lamb 12, not enough to nominate if united. It is probable a half dozen ballots will be necessary to settle the question.

Option.

The feeling that the county option bill ought to stand is undoubtedly growing here. It is now stated that 17 members of the house and 5 of the senate on the Democratic side will oppose the repeal. In the house this movement is headed by Representatives Risner and Hostetter. In the upper house senators Shafer, Long, McCarthy, Yarling and Tilden are currently reported as "stand-patters." It is probable that others will take the same view a little later in the session when the fight begins.

Marshall's Message.

Governor Marshall's message has created a profound impression among the members of both parties. The opinion is current among the members of the legislature that the message goes to the very root of needed reforms. The suggestion of cutting in places and salaries has set the office hunters squealing, as Marshall predicted it would. There is no doubt that if the new governor has his way there will be radical retrenchment in state expenditures during his administration.

BURNS RESULT IN DEATH

The death of Mrs. John Lewis, aged 21, occurred at her home just south of Cloverdale, of burns received January 5. Mrs. Lewis' clothes caught fire from a shovel of live coals she was carrying from one stove to another.

EIGHT INCHES OF SNOW

Earth Covered With Deep Blanket This Morning—Began Falling Early Yesterday Afternoon and Continued far Into the Night—Heaviest Snow for Several Years.

SNOW PLOWS CLEAN THE PATHS

When Greencastle people arose this morning the earth was covered with a blanket of snow. Eight inches of the white mantle covered the ground. The snow began falling early Monday afternoon and continued far into the night. It was a cold dry snow, which did not melt as it struck the earth.

And the weather was cold. Very cold. This morning the men of the house had to coax their furnaces along to get the house warm and last night many extra blankets were pulled out of their places of hiding.

The city got its snow plows out early last evening and cleaned the paths but the snow was falling so fast that by morning the sidewalks were deep in snow again. The snow plows were started again and by nine o'clock the sidewalks were in good shape for the school children. The business men, who got down town early, however, had to plow their way through the drifts and by the time they got to their stores they were pretty well fagged out. The snow is one of the heaviest which has fallen here for several years. The farmers, are the ones who appreciate it most, as it will materially help the wheat, which so far this year, has had little to help it along.

The snow brought out the sleighs and sleds which had been in storage for many months. The tinkle of sleigh bells was heard early this morning and all day the number kept increasing until this afternoon most every sleigh in town was out. From the country came the bob-sleds, the first seen around here for a long time. These offered great sport for the school boys and girls and, who after the schools were out, had great sport "jumping" the sleds and riding to the edge of town.

It was much colder than most people believed, too. Four degrees above zero, was what the thermometer said early this morning. The snow was the heaviest for four years. At least that is what the old-timers, who keep record of such things, say.

THE OPEN BALLOT.

By far the most interesting matter before the Democrats previous to the caucus for United States Senator is whether or not the balloting in that caucus shall be open or secret. John W. Kern and John E. Lamb have both declared for an open ballot. Both these candidates feel that the open method of voting is both Democratic and honest. They hold that all the work of the Democrats should be open to the public, and that the selection of a United States Senator is equally as important as any legislation likely to come up this term. Lamb is especially generous and loyal to the party in taking this position, as it is conceded that it will cost him votes. Kern, on the other hand, will gain by it. It is felt that the people of the state are for Kern, and that an open ballot will bring votes to him from men personally in favor of some of the other candidates. Shively, especially, seems to feel this to be true and will oppose strongly, if not openly, the roll call on the caucus ballot. The people of the state are making themselves heard on the question and many demands for an open ballot are coming in. This is Democratic, honest and in harmony with the publicity plank of the national platform, and the people's demand should be obeyed.

"Yessum," answered Bobby, "and mamma, after I had given it to him I noticed that he had the slice with all the seeds in it."

"Oh, yes, mamma, I had lots of consideration."

"Yes, indeed. When I saw all those seeds I was afraid they might give him appendicitis, so I ate his slice, too."

Mixed Composition.

"Gimme a pound of sugar," snapped the crabbed woman in the red sunbonnet.

"What will it be, madam?" asked the rural storekeeper, who was slightly deaf.

"Oh, I reckon it will be a composition of sand and glucose. That's what it always turns out to be when I buy it here."

And the next time the crabbed woman in the red sunbonnet came in the old storekeeper sent his brightest clerk to take her order.

"He is good to his wife."

"Indeed! How so?"

"He doesn't live with her!"—Town Topics.

DESTROYS THE RUBBISH IN NATIONAL FORESTS

Uncle Sam is Doing Good Job of Woodyard Cleaning to Prevent Timberland Fires.

Uncle Sam has begun a housecleaning job that probably will last 20 years. The old gentleman always did hate to see rubbish lying around in the wood yard, being mighty neat and particular in his habits, and it wasn't the work for women folk, and the capitalist bired men couldn't be trusted, so he just rolled up his sleeves and went to work himself. The national forests is the official name of the backyard space that Uncle purposes to get shipshape within a generation, and then he will invite the neighbors in to have a good time and shoot all the bears and squirrels they feel like. The underbrush and fallen timber accumulated for years are not only a general injury to the live trees, but a menace in case of a forest fire, so that the thing to do is to clean up everywhere and burn the rubbish.

A thinning out of inferior trees, leaving the finest and most perfect stand of timber, is going on at the same time, says the New York Tribune. As a matter of fact, Uncle Sam is too shrewd to bend his own back at the job, but he supervises, through his foresters, the work of private contractors and sawmill men. He lets them cut down the undesirable trees and makes them destroy the waste and old stuff. A ranger goes through the forest and marks the inferior trees, such as have punk knots, spike tops, low forks and scars of fire or frost. These make good merchantable lumber, while their removal betters the environment of the choice specimens that are saved. The sawmill men doesn't dare to take anything except the marked trees; and he must cut them so that they will not damage standing trees when they fall, and must leave a low stump instead of a high stump, as under the old reckless methods. After settlers have helped themselves to what they want of the waste the rest is heaped up in conical piles. All the small stuff, underbrush and branches, is put in the center and the heavier pieces stacked on the outside. It wouldn't do to burn this mass in dry season, because that would start a forest fire that would clean up too thoroughly. Nature supplies a safe means of solving the problem during the winter months by wrapping heavy blankets of snow around the conical heaps. Along comes the forester with a gasoline can, bores his way into the center of the pile, puts on the oil and applies a match. The fire burns slowly and eats its way through the heart of the wasteful material. The flames don't rise to the surrounding trees, because the blanket of snow keeps them down, and in a few hours a circle of black coals in the snow shows where the pile of waste stood.

After cleaning and burning, the forest officials look after replanting in places that need it. Sometimes the tops of first-class seed trees are shaken over the ground, a rough and ready way of planting.

There is a plant, native of Borneo, which is known as the "clock plant." The name is derived from the action of the sun's rays on the leaves, which are three in number—a large one extending forward, with two small ones at the base pointing sideways. These, coming in contact with the rays of the sun, oscillate like the pendulum of a clock, the larger leaf moving upward and downward, going its full length every 45 minutes, the smaller leaves moving toward the larger, completing the distance forward and backward every 45 minutes, thus resembling the hour and minute hands of a clock.

THE LESSON.

Teacher—Pray, can you tell me how bread is made?

Child—No. Nor do I see any necessity for the assimilation of knowledge which will almost certainly be useless to me in my subsequent career.

Teacher—Oh, hush! You must say your lesson nicely out of the pretty book mamma gave you.

Child—Pardon me. The little work to which you refer is simple, though probably inaccurate. And, as I have the book, the information is always at my disposal, if by some unlikely chance I should ever require it. There is no necessity for me to learn it by heart. Let me put you just one question, Miss Witherspoon: Did you yourself know how bread was made until an oversensitive conscience made you believe that it was necessary I should learn about it?

Teacher—Of course I did. I knew that bread was made with flour.

Child—But how slight and worthless is such knowledge! Do you know anything at all of the chemistry of fermentation, a subject on which this book barely touches? Do you know anything of the conditions under which bakers work in London? Can you tell me what legal guarantees we have to prevent adulteration and short weight? Do you know what the trades' union rate of wages for bakers is? When a baker, in advertising for a place, says that he "can do a few smalls," do you know what he means?

Teacher—My dear child, you are far too young to learn such things at present. You must begin at the beginning.

Child—That may be true, if in this case it is necessary for me to begin at all. But certainly, if I begin, I must go on to the end. And the same person who teaches me the beginning must know the end and be able to teach that also. Otherwise there is certain to be something in the early lessons which will be futile and with greater knowledge require correction. I do not wish to make a personal matter of this at all, but the education of children is a subject upon which I have reflected considerably, and I have come to the conclusion that most children are taught many things which have no practical or even educative value for them. And, secondly, their education is too often intrusted to women who do not really know the subjects which they teach, but only know such scraps of the subjects as are to be found in a child's elementary primer.

Teacher—But perhaps I do know all these things, about chemistry and wages and so on.

Child—Quite so. And perhaps the moon is made of green cheese. But, in the absence of any satisfactory evidence that this is the case I shall continue to believe the contrary. The fact of the matter is, that you know very little, Miss Witherspoon.

Teacher—You are not to talk to me like that. You are a very naughty, rude little boy. I shall make you stand in the corner.

Child—My dear Miss Witherspoon, I had no intention whatever of being rude. I merely thought it better that you and I should face the facts simply and without affectation. Knowledge has always its money value. Intelligence has also its money value. For the extremely wretched stipendium which my short-sighted father pays you he has no right to expect very much knowledge or very much intelligence, nor have I any reason to believe that he gets them. Undoubtedly the very highest salaries paid for teaching should be paid to those who teach children between the ages of three and eight. Professors of universities, on the other hand, instructing those who have already learned to learn, are never worth more than $5 a week and should not be paid more. The most important part of education for good or evil—and generally for evil—takes place between the ages of three and eight.

Teacher—What funny ideas you do get into your little brain! Possibly there is some sense in some of them. You think, then, I ought to be paid a very high salary for teaching you?

Child—My dear lady, I must have expressed myself very badly if that is what you suppose. I think an adequate teacher for me should certainly be paid very highly. But, if I may speak frankly, I doubt if you are even worth the extremely paltry salary that you receive. You are not teaching because you like teaching. I should imagine that you disliked it. But you wish to make a livelihood. You may possibly be fond of children in a way, but you do not in the least understand them. Your whole attitude toward children is purely a matter of tradition, and based on no original thought or observation of your own. Take, for instance, that absurd punishment you suggested just now; unless one chooses to think so, it is not a punishment—not even an indignity. The particular part of the floor space in this room where two walls converge at right angles is not intrinsically worse than any other part of it. The attitude of standing is not more shameful than the attitude of sitting. Unless I am prepared to accept the tradition as you do—and I certainly am not—you cannot punish me in that way. You can make me stand in the corner, but to me it will be no punishment at all.

Teacher—Jabber, jabber, jabber—I never heard anything like it! I can find plenty of punishments that would punish you. How would you like to have your pudding stopped at luncheon?

Child—I should dislike it extremely. But the punishment is characterized by exactly the same simplicity as the other. At any time of life regular nutrition is of the first importance. The pudding supplies a physiological and even dangerous to thwart.

Teacher—Now do stop it, there's a good boy! Look at this nice book mamma's given you. She will be disappointed if you have not learned anything about it. If you don't want to know how bread is made suppose we see where coffee comes from. Coffee, you know, is a berry and—Why, there's the clock. Your lesson time is done for today.

Child—And yours also.—Bany Pain.

HOW SHE DECIDED.

The two men left the room where dancers were gliding over the smooth floor, and walked to the veranda. They stopped in a dark, quiet corner. "I love her," said one.

He was slender, slightly below medium height.

"So do I," said the other.

He was athletically large.

The smaller man dropped his hand on the other's arm.

"Any one would who knew her."

The larger man nodded sympathetically. The smaller looked at him honestly.

"You've been the best friend I've ever had," he said.

The larger man reached out and gave his hand a clasp.

"You've been a better to me," he said.

"We've made our way together," the smaller man went on. "We've made our lives the same. I've leaned on you, you on me."

He stopped, and they remained silent.

"We love the same woman," he said abruptly. "We can't let that break into our friendship. One must give her up—to the other."

The larger man flipped the ashes from his cigar.

"Who?" he said.

The smaller man dug into his pocket, then tossed something into the air. The larger man coughed and dropped his cigar. He mopped at his forehead with his hand.

"Heads," he said hoarsely.

They struck a match. The match dropped and the larger man leaned heavily against the banister railing. The smaller threw one arm over his shoulder.

"I'm sorry," he said.

The larger turned round and caught his hand.

"It's all right," he said. "Don't mind. Things will be the same. I won't change."

They stood silently for some time, then they turned and walked slowly up the veranda. At an open window suddenly both stopped and changed color. A girl's face had appeared at the window. At the girl's side was a well-knit, mediumly tall young fellow. They sat on a small settee, their backs to the window.

From the room came a man's voice, low and tender.

"I love you," he said. "I've always loved you. You are my life, my world. Without you I have nothing, with you everything."

The soft voice of a woman followed.

"I believe women should be frank and sincere," she said. "I love you. You are as much to me as I to you."

Out on the veranda a man coughed chokingly and another ground his heel into the floor.—A. M. Perkerson.

Sour Aid.

Napoleon was in a witty mood.

Calling his trusty lieutenant to his side, he said:

"Antonio, I wish to ask you a frank question. I don't believe you like my aid."

"Well, general," hesitated the lieutenant, "to be candid with you, I don't."

"And why not?"

"He's a 'lemon.'"

Napoleon laughed until his snuff-box rattled.

"A 'lemon'? Ha! Ha! That's good. If he is a 'lemon' he must be a lemon aid."

And after such a joke as this it is little wonder Napoleon lost the battle of Waterloo.

Pittsburg's Emblem.

You may drift out from Pittsburg and wash off the dirt.

And scrape all the soot from your collar and shirt;

You may scratch all your labels and do as you will,

But the scent of the stogie will cling to you still.

A Possible Solution.

"The earth is wobbling."

"So?"

"Scientists note traces of a new form of motion."

"Maybe Atlas is rolling us up a hill to satisfy an election bet."

The College Widow.

"Mr. Leftguard hugs like a Yarvard man."

"Is there a difference?"

"Oh, yes. Every college has a distinctive style of tackle."

A SHOCK.

We were leaning over the front gate. I held both her hands in mine and looked into her moonlit eyes. I was twenty, she not quite eighteen. I was going west to seek my fortune. When I had made a competence—I couldn't bear to consider more than three months sufficient for the purpose—I was to return and take her back with me.

"Life in the meanwhile," she said, "will be one long period of waiting."

"It will seem an age to me."

"You will be engrossed in business. That will make you forget."

"I shall never forget. I shall lay down thirty days for each month on paper and each morning check one off. To see them disappear will be my only comfort."

There was silence for awhile. A distant clock struck 11.

"In seven hours my train will be pulling out the station. I have yet to pack."

"Must you go?"

"Yes, farewell."

But another hour passed and I was not gone. The same clock struck 12. I drew her to me. There was a long long kiss. Then I turned and without looking back hurried away.

A month of daily letter writing, a month of alternate day writing, a month of weekly writing—the three months that I had laid out wherein to attain the wherewithal to bring her to me—had passed, and I had only just found a position giving me $15 a week. The correspondence died a peaceful death. There were no reproaches on either side. In youth associations are forming and reforming rapidly. One autumn it is Charlie and Will and Tom and Lucy and Mary and Fannie; the next spring it is Charlie and Arthur and Pete and Ethel and Maud and Kate.

Youth is but a kaleidoscope—the same colors under different groupings. Two years after leaving home I could not tell who wrote the last letter, she or I. Three years and I couldn't have told whether her eyes were black, brown or hazel. Five years, and one day in ransacking among a lot of rubbish I came upon her picture—the picture I had dreamed over for hours at a time.

She married and went to another city to live. I didn't hear her married name, or if I did I forgot it. It was twelve years from our parting over the gate before I saw her again. It was at a summer resort. I had become infatuated with a girl of twenty, fresh as a new blown rose, and when the hot season came I followed her to the country. She was chaperoned by her aunt, Mrs. Schenck, apparently about forty, with grizzly gray hair, a pinched expression and a sharp voice. She had five children, all of them with her, and no nurse. Surely was not that enough to spoil any woman's attractiveness?

I became engaged. It was evening, and I was obliged to leave the next morning. I told my story and was accepted at the last moment before my departure and as everybody at the hotel was going to bed. When I set off for the train she went with me down to the gate, and we stood leaning over it, I without, she within. I held both her hands in mine and looked into her moonlit eyes. I assured her that I should look forward to her return to the city with eagerness, and she promised to cut short her stay in the country. We heard a locomotive whistle, a distant rattle, drawing nearer, and a train stopped at the station below; then presently the moon shone on something white, and a woman came up the path.

"Oh, Aunt Juanita," exclaimed my fiancée, "where have you been?"

I started. I had cause to remember that name—that uncommon name—Juanita.

"To the postoffice to get Frank's letter. He always posts it to come on this train."

"I'm so glad you're here that you may congratulate us on our engagement. It only occurred a few minutes ago. I am so happy."

"I rejoice with you, my dear. I know just how happy you feel, because your lover made me feel just as happy a dozen years ago."

"You are"—I exclaimed.

"Certainly I am."

"Oh, aunt, what does this mean?"

"A case of puppy love between two puppies."

"And did he—surely he did not play you false?"

"No more than I did him."

"Singular," I interposed, "that I didn't recognize you."

"Not at all. A woman, especially a married woman with five children, grows old very quickly, while a man usually stands still till he is past forty." Then, kissing her niece, she said to her: "I wish you every happiness, dear. I can conscientiously recommend your lover and assure you that you will be happy with him. And I ought to know, for I have tested him myself as a fiancée."

I departed in a singular state of mind. My happiness had received a shock. I regretted nothing. I did not blame myself nor my first love. Thus far I had lived under the impression that elderly people had come from some far distant land with which the rest of us have nothing to do. Here was one of my own generation who had passed in a twinkling, it seemed, from the bud to that bloom wherein the petals fall.

NO MORE PHOSSY JAW.

White Phosphorous in Match Manufacture to be Prohibited.

After many years of agitation the use of the deadly white phosphorous in the manufacture of matches is soon to be prohibited. A bill backed by Herbert Gladstone and Herbert Samuel with this object in view was introduced in the House of Commons last week, and fuller details of the measure, which was issued from the printers on Saturday, will give satisfaction to the thousands of people employed in this dangerous trade.

The government's action is the indirect result of the Berne labor conference of September, 1906, when representatives of France, Germany, Italy, Holland, Denmark and Switzerland consented to the prohibition, Great Britain then withholding her agreement. As the outcome of a consultation with the manufacturers the promoters of the bill now before Parliament have made it possible for less dangerous substitutes for white phosphorous which are protected by patents to be obtained on reasonable terms by all manufacturers.

The use of the poisonous white phosphorous is not necessary in the business of match-making. Its employment, moreover, is highly dangerous to the workpeople, for it gives rise to the painful disease of necrosis of the jaw, commonly known as "phossy jaw." This disease has much the same effect on those attacked by it as that of leprosy, and it works the same horrible ravages on the face and hands.

The bill, if it passes into law, will not only forbid the use of white phosphorous in the manufacture of matches but will also make it illegal for any one to sell or import matches in the making of which white phosphorous has been used.—London Daily Chronicle.

Fighting Formosan Tribes.

Several weeks ago ten communities of the Nan-Ow aboriginal tribe in the Gran province of Formosa proposed to the government to submit. Upon this the government gave them the following terms of conditions under which the government was disposed to admit their submission:

1. The aborigines concerned should hand over to the government those skulls which had been cut off the bodies of the other tribes whom they killed and are keeping in their houses according to their habits.

2. Their arms and ammunition should all be surrendered to the government.

The aborigines agreed to the former condition, but many of them objected to the latter, and thereupon they gave up the idea of submission. Since then they are again offering resistance against the government troops, appearing here and there in the vicinity of the Ayu line (a guard line established by the government against the unsubjugated aborigines) and the government troops having finished the construction of their guard houses, telephone lines and wire entanglements, and thus almost attained their object, are now chiefly paying attention to their guard service, attaching less importance to their submission.—South China Morning Post.

A Cunning Lawyer.

Some people lose their heads at the first sign of defeat, and by so doing insure it. Not so one old lawyer, however. His presence of mind has obtained a favorable verdict on many occasions when the odds were decidedly against him.

Recently, it is said, he instructed a very young client of his to weep every time he thumped the desk in front.

Unfortunately, however, the young lady mistook one of the lawyer's impressive taps for a decided thump, and burst into a fit of sobbing at the wrong moment.

"What is the matter with you?" demanded the presiding Judge.

The lady looked up and answered through her tears:

"He," indicating the lawyer, "told me to cry every time he thumped the table!"

Here was a nice predicament, surely enough, to unnerv the coolest. But the astute lawyer was equal to the occasion, and actually turned the circumstances to his advantage.

"Gentlemen," he said impressively, turning to the jury, "how can you reconcile the idea of crime in conjunction with such childish candor and simplicity? I await your verdict with the utmost confidence."

And he was duly rewarded.

Strange Marriages.

Marriages are sometimes solemnized in strange places. In Christ church a wedding took place not a year ago in a church which was already partially demolished to make way for a new building. More recently still a church in which a marriage was about to take place in England was burned down and the firemen were still pouring water upon the smoking ruins when a wedding party made their way over the debris. They had fixed the date and hour of their wedding, and, fire or no fire, they meant to go through the business, and a complaisant clergyman enabled them to do so.—Woman's Life.

The estimated cost of the Roosevelt dam, which is a part of the Salt River irrigation scheme, has been cut down by $1,000,000 by the establishment of a government cement mill on the spot.

Dr. Pierce's Health Talks

The miracle of motherhood is often overshadowed by the misery of motherhood. The great functional changes which are incident to child bearing leave their mark for life on many a mother. Some women offer up their lives as a sacrifice on the altar of motherhood. A far greater number live on in ceaseless misery. Their strength fails, their beauty fades, they have no ambition and no enjoyment in life. To every woman

DEPAUW NEWS

IMPROVEMENTS ARE BEGUN

A GANG OF WORKMEN ARE AT WORK IN EAST COLLEGE.

ELECTRIC WIRING; FIRE ESCAPES

During the next few months much needed improvement on the university buildings will be carried on. The contract for wiring the eastern part of East College has been let to Robert Hanna, a student in the university, and his workmen are now putting in the main circuit wire for the building. The wiring of Dean Post's and Colonel Weaver's lecture rooms will be completed within a few days.

Although the contract has not yet been let for the wiring and equipping of Meharry Hall complete with electric lighting facilities estimates are being received and it is now planned to have the new fixtures installed for the address of President McConnell on February 10. The new fixtures will comprise an elaborate equipment which will add much to the attractiveness of the hall and make the remarkably poor lighting of Meharry Hall a thing of the past. Red exit lights will be placed at the fire escapes both on the main floor and at those which will be soon erected for the balcony.

The contract for the balcony fire escapes will probably be signed today as Dr. Town has received satisfactory plans for their erection. The new escapes will start from both corner windows at the south end of the balcony; meeting at a large outside balcony on the south center window of the main floor from which two escapes to the ground will be built. This arrangement will both afford emergency escape from the gallery and improve the present facilities for the main floor of the hall.

The trustees have already taken action on the matter and fire escapes will be placed on other buildings of the university.

WORKED TWO TEAMS YESTERDAY

In preparation for Wednesday's game with Rose Poly, Coach Brown took a squad of 11 men to Terre Haute for practice yesterday afternoon. This will give the team an advantage that they would not otherwise have had, since much better team work can be done when all of the men know the floor thoroughly.

The practice was held in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium and was satisfactory in every way. The squad was divided into two teams and scrimmage work was done.

Seven new suits have arrived. White has been chosen this year in preference to the rather ominous color used last year.

A Genuine Diamond

THE KING OF DIAMONDS HAS LICENSE TAKEN AWAY.

Alleged Bogus Gem Man Rails at Newspapers.

BURLINGTON, IA., Nov. 14.—For some time past newspapers in Iowa cities have been reporting the operations of a man whom they called "The King of Diamonds."

It appears that there was nothing criminal in his operations, which consisted in selling "phony" diamonds, but his methods of procedure were not exactly according to the rules. He usually drops into a jobbing house and tells of meeting such and such a representative of the house on the road and selling him a diamond to be delivered at the store. He explains that the diamond is only an imitation, and offers to sell anybody else around the place the same thing. Thus he works up an interest and usually succeeds in selling some of his glassware. Mr. Jack of Diamonds dropped into City Auditor Norton's office one morning and secured a license to sell his wares. He had only been out a short time, however, until Chief of Police Hiltz learned of him. Calling in the peddler, he relieved him of his license and gave him back the money he had paid for it. As the man had committed no crime he was released. He was bitter against the newspapers for injuring his business.

If you want to wear a simulation diamond, to the ordinary observer almost like unto a gem of the purest sere, a fitting substitute for the genuine, or if you want to make money, don't wait—ACT TODAY, as this advertisement may not appear, nor this unusual and extraordinary opportunity occur again. Where Women Rule.

A remnant of the Sevis tribe of Indians inhabits the Island of Tiburon, in the Gulf of California, and is ruled entirely by the women. Formerly the tribe numbered about five thousand, but is now shrunk to a few hundred, living a life of almost complete isolation, and refusing to intermarry with any of the Indians of the mainland. The woman is master of the household, and a council of matrons is at the head of public affairs.

A Botanical Clock.

INDIANA VOTE FOR TAFT

Presidential Electors Chosen At Last Election Meet in Indianapolis at The State House—Ben S. Corwin Of This City, Represents Fifth District.

A CONTEST FOR MESSENGER

The fifteenth presidential electors chosen at the November election to cast the vote of Indiana for William H. Taft, of Ohio, for President, and James S. Sherman, of New York, for Vice-President, met in the chamber of the House of Representatives at 10 o'clock this morning and cast their votes according to a constitutional provision proposed by Oliver P. Morton, as a United States Senator, in the early seventies, when he introduced a resolution providing for a reconstruction of the national election machinery.

Winfield T. Durbin, elector-at-large, of Anderson, was chosen president of the meeting of the electors and Caleb S. Denny, of Indianapolis, was made secretary. After the ballots were cast and Taft and Sherman were officially declared the choice of the majority of the voters of Indiana for President and Vice-President, Mr. Durbin was elected messenger "to start forthwith" with a copy of the result of the election, to be delivered to the President of the United States Senate, Vice-President Charles W. Fairbanks.

Unexpected rivalry for the place as messenger to Washington developed when the balloting began. The result of the vote was: Durbin, 8; F. C. Gardner, of Indianapolis, 2; E. P. Thayer, of Greenfield, 1; Benjamin F. Corwin, of Greencastle, 1, and D. E. Beem, of Spencer, 1.

Mr. Durbin will start for Washington either late this afternoon or tomorrow morning.

The electors who met today were: At large, Winfield T. Durbin, of Anderson, and Fred C. Gardner, of Indianapolis.

From the districts, in order named, David Ingle, Oakland City; David E. Beem, Spencer; Jacob V. Stinson, Huntington; Thomas L. Orsath, Versailles; Benjamin Corwin, Greencastle; Edwin P. Thayer, Greenfield; Caleb S. Denny, Indianapolis; John M. Frisinger, Decatur; George M. Palmer, Sheridan; Daniel Frazer, Fowler; Milton Kraus, Peru; Francis D. Merritt, Lagrange, and Edward B. Smith, Warsaw.—Indianapolis News.

HEAT PRODUCING FLOWERS.

Generate Sufficient Heat to Melt Surrounding Snow.

The saidanella or snowbell of the Alps is a dainty little plant about three inches high, bearing two pendulous white or violet bells on each flower stalk. They may often be found with the snow still firmly frozen round the stem, and the question naturally arises how did the blossoms, so much larger in circumference, make their way through? Botanists tell us that the plant forms its flower buds under the snow, and in the process of breathing evolves so much heat that the encircling snow is melted and trickles down the stalk, round which it frequently freezes again. Thus gradually a dome shaped cavity is formed round the blossom, and the process is continued till in many cases they succeed in reaching the surface.

A modified form of the same heat producing power may be noticed in the foxglove. On a comparatively cool day, when little wind is stirring, a thermometer inserted in the bell-like flowers of a plant growing in a shady place will frequently register a temperature one to two degrees higher than that of surrounding air, and even more startling results are obtained from plants in which a number of small flowers are congregated together within an outer sheath or spathe, as in the arums.

Against the Rummage Sale.

Medical men are inclined to make war on the rummage sale as a menace to health, it having been proved to be a conveyor of contagious diseases. A more unsanitary device was never imagined. The stuff sent to the rubbish; much of the wearing apparel has been resurrected from trash heaps or unused closets, and is of no real use to any one. The danger of lurking germs is very real, and it seems almost criminally reckless to expose innocent children to it. Women have become so sensible in their practice of good works that the rummage sale appears like an anachronism.

Limited Understanding.

"It does seem strange," remarked the party who seemed to be thinking aloud.

"What seems strange?" queried the innocent bystander.

"That after getting a man in hot water a woman can't understand why he should boil over," explained the noisy thinker.

CANARIES AT POULTRY SHOW

Brazil Opens First Exhibit of Chickens and Other Pet Stock—65 Cages Of Canaries and Other Singing Birds.

200 FOWLS ON EXHIBITION

The Brazil Daily News has the following about the poultry show which is now being held in that city:

"The first poultry and pet stock show ever given in this city will open this evening in the Doyle room, the first door west of the Bayer pharmacy, under the auspices of the Clay County Poultry and Pet Stock Association.

"Many of the exhibits which have entered have not yet arrived this afternoon but all of the available show space was about taken up at that time and the officials of the poultry show are going to have considerable trouble finding room for all of the exhibits.

"An unusual fine display of all breeds of chickens are on display at the show. Many of the best chickens are the property of local chicken fanciers who promise to carry off some of the best prizes, but there are also exhibits from various parts of Indiana and Illinois.

"Over two hundred chickens will be on exhibition in addition to birds and other pet stock. There will be at least 65 cages of fine canary birds on exhibition and many other species of singing members of the feathery tribe.

"The poultry show will be opened to the public at 7 o'clock this evening and will be open for the balance of the week. An admission of but 10 cents will be charged and everybody interested in chickens and pet stock should attend the exhibit."

STATEMENT OF VOORHEES

Sunday Star Contains Interview With Greencastle Aspirant for Senatorship.

IS NEAREST TO THE OLD SCHOOL

The following is a clipping from the Indianapolis Sunday Star in which J. Paxton Voorhees makes third claim to Senatorship: Greencastle, Ind., Jan. 9.—J. Paxton Voorhees today made the following statement regarding the contest for the United States Senatorship:

"In the situation now presented before the Indiana Legislature are a number of estimable candidates for the United States Senatorship who have peculiar claims, and, in one way or another, advance them, based upon association with the nearness to the school—the political school—of the past—the school of Voorhees, Hendricks, McDonald, etc.

"To say that able and efficient training and experience of the past—connection with its cherished traditions, its earlier glories—are not indispensable to the present would be, indeed, unjust. With individual capability and sufficiency, such association is an invaluable possession. Who of us are nearer than another to the past? It may be that some are. I, myself, may doubtless have a claim to an ever closer, nearer companionship than many another with the political 'long ago.'

"A quarter of a century's personal, filial and public political experience with my father as his confidential associate and private secretary naturally and assuredly places me at the head of this class, and it becomes but the proper truth so to say. Such a statement, connecting with and relating to so wide and varied a degree of public life and experience, gives guarantee of the most perfect verity.

"It is with but the kindest of feelings that I feel it my personal duty to allude to facts of such a nature, with a view to correcting any unintentional, or otherwise misleading apprehension or impression on this score.

"It is, further, but natural that I, a son of one of the illustrious and leading figures of the days gone by, should feel, not jealous, but grateful of my own near and dear tie."
